Soaring Eagles Weekly News

A great strategy for developing word recognition is Pocket Words. The purpose is to provide a way for students to receive intermittent practice while taking personal responsibility for learning a limited number of new words. The strategy simply involves cutting a three-by-five card into four equal pieces as illustrated below. Each of the four new words is placed on a separate card. The new words on the cards come directly from the content the student is reading.

The student reviews the words and puts them in a pocket. By carrying the words in their pocket, you can periodically ask your child to review his or her pocket words thus providing the repetition and spaces practice needed by your child to master each new word. The amount of repetition needed to achieve mastery will vary. Your child may need fewer repetitions or as many as 50 repetitions (Hargis, et.al., 1988) to reach mastery.

This technique helps you not to overload your child with too many unknown words at one time. It helps to develop a more relaxed atmosphere for you to help your child become very successful. (Gickling)
