

News from the Media Center

We are completing our Native American studies and reading holiday books.

Kindergarteners listened to Native American stories and are listening to holiday stories.

First Graders heard some Native American stories but concentrated on Eric Carle and are starting on Jan Brett. The collages made similar to Eric Carle's will soon be on display.

Second Graders listened to Native American tales, did a Native American activity on the Internet, and made some Native American replicas which are displayed in the Media Center. They are now learning about holiday traditions in different countries.

Third Graders are completing a Native American project on some of the different Native American regions.

New Math books have arrived and some of them are on display in the showcase. These books are not your typical "math" books. Some interesting titles are The Greedy Triangle, Missing Mittens, and Quilt Counting. The students are enjoying these books.

Some classes are doing a terrific job returning their books. Please remind your child on their library day to return their books. Also have them put their books in their backpacks to protect them from inclement weather.

Remember to set aside time every day to read. You can never read too many books.
